The aim of the study was to investigate the validity of plasma kinetics and indirect marker ratios for the detection of myocardial ischaemia. Ten healthy subjects and 18 patients with coronary heart disease were included in the study. The patients were examined by exercise stress testing followed by myocardial scintigraphy, 16 hours after tracer injection. Blood samples were drawn before and at 0.25, 0.5, 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 12, and 24 hours after tracer injection. Established myocardial ischaemia was accompanied by increased heart-to-background ratios of blood activities of thallium-201 and technetium-99m labelled agents and abnormal time course of the radionuclide activities in the myocardium. Plasma kinetics of the radionuclides were not clearly modified in patients with myocardial ischaemia, nor were the indirect marker ratios clearly different. It was concluded that scintigraphy is an appropriate method for the detection of myocardial ischaemia. The results of the study indicate that the reported methods for myocardial ischaemia detection cannot be applied with certainty to the clinical routine.Our passions lead us to start 3RP – The Newspaper. 3RP – The Newspaper is a new initiative that aims to serve the needs of the fashion conscious girl looking for juicy news and infographics.
