Q: is there a way to get a variable of a method in javascript? Is there a way to get a variable of a method in Javascript? This is what I mean: `var s=0; function a() { s++; }`

`var i = a(); // would return 5, but i should be 1` I know that I can use the `Function.prototype.bind()` function, but I'm looking for a native way. Is there one? A: This is what you need.

var s=0; function a() { s++;}
a.call(this); // this is the current scope,
in this case window So you can then
call it: var i = a(); // will be 1 Q:

Python: List a property of a list is it possible to get a list, from a list, of a property of that list? For example, I have: # Print out the message. `print(a)`
`a = [['hello', 'world'], ['what', 'is', 'up'], ['you', 'can', 'call', 'me']]` def

`print_list(lst): # is there a way to get
['you', 'can', 'call', 'me'] from a?
print(a) print_list(a) I'm not sure if I explained it well enough. A: Use an iterator: >>> a = [['hello', 'world'], ['what', 'is', 'up'], ['you', 'can',
'call', 'me']] >>> i = iter(a) >>> next(i)
['you', 'can', 'call', 'me'] >>> next(i)
['what',`

What Are Those Things You've Been Seeing in the Sky? New Technology May Be Catching Them Earlier this month, a video went viral of a meteor exploding over the skies of Seattle, Washington. In the video, you can see a bright fireball above the horizon. In an instant, the fireball evolves into a series of bright streaks, which appear to be falling out of the sky. As the streaks get closer to the ground, they take the appearance of a long, slowly-moving, glowing UFO, before disappearing into the horizon. For the uninitiated, this is not something you see every day. But, those skilled in observing the skies have witnessed these bright lights before. In fact, it is what is known as a meteor fireball. The idea of meteor fireballs was first proposed in the 1950s by American astronomer Dr. Donald E. Boynton. He coined the term "fireball" because meteors originate in space and burst into flames as they enter the atmosphere.

Although not entirely certain of the cause of a meteor's appearance, some researchers believe it is due to the lighting effect caused by rapid changes in air pressure. In other words, the aerodynamic forces of high-speed, gas-filled objects causes a compression wave that momentarily compresses the atmosphere. As the wave moves through the atmosphere, it does a "bend" to it. This bending of the atmospheric pressure is what causes the appearance of a bright streak in the sky. It may be that we are only beginning to understand all of this. For example, in an article published in the Journal of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, the researchers explain that "we know very little about how meteorites break up, and... how they are generated by the early solar system." More from
