FIFA 19 introduced a "Focus" system that allowed players to focus their dribble on particular spots of the field, while keeping everything else on the screen the same. Players can adjust their focus points by performing what are known as "Focus Shifts" during gameplay. It also introduced "Highlight Reels," which showed a clip of players' best actions from the game. However, the best-action highlight reel, showed only the highlights that did not involve the player, which players usually prefer to keep out of their highlight videos. In FIFA 22, you'll be able to get individual player highlights by selecting that player from the player cards instead of having to watch the whole-team highlight reel, as usual. FIFA 22 introduces a new step-by-step Player Training System that allows you to gradually get better at any skill you want, with customized drills and workout routines. The system will also allow you to read the mind of a coach (with the added ability to make your own drills) and also pair your player up with a friend for a workout, while joining a team of other players and getting the coaching from an experienced coach. Gamers who want to fully customize their football sessions can take advantage of the Training and Tactics screen that lets them focus on only what they want to train or tactics they want to focus on. The tactical screen shows team tactics, goals, possession, movement, goals from open play, and many more statistics about the game. FIFA 22 introduces "Player Intelligence," which allows the players to communicate with AI teammates during the game, and for AI teammates to predict what you want to do next, such as pass the ball to you to keep possession or to move away. "Intellivision" video analysis provides players with inside information about what other players will do to win on the pitch. For example, video analysis will show where your team-mates would be passing the ball to you when the opponent's team tries to counter attack. FIFA 21 introduced a pretty huge club mode change where clubs were moved to a new "Club Story Mode" for a way more immersive experience. FIFA 22 takes club mode to a whole other level, introducing a new "League Management" screen that lets you manage your entire club from outside the game. Using "League Management", you can access all the league data, review all player data, manage your club
