The game is an ARPG, a mix between Diablo/Baldurs Gate, Final Fantasy/Skyrim, etc. [Warning: Dishonored 2 spoilers follow!] The setting is a dystopian city named Karnaca with a never-ending plague known as the Black Death. It started approximately 500 years ago and has left thousands infected and displaced throughout the city. Much of the story will follow Corvo Attano, a legendary assassin known as the Thief, as he searches for his missing wife Emily Kaldwin and the truth of his father's death. He is aided on his mission by the charismatic but not too reliable new mayor, Emily's lover Lincoln, who leads the Garrison troops, and the captain of the guards known as the Gatherer, whose job it is to hunt down the remaining carriers of the Black Death. Lincoln and his militia allies are under attack by robots during the first ten chapters of the game, and Corvo must determine how they are built, launch a sneak attack, and whether or not they are useful allies for the rest of the city. HOW TO PLAY: The game can be played in two different ways: single-player and co-op. Blacksmith is a tool to find other coins and gold in the world. And the place where you can find them is within the ruins of the DREAD(Do-Ri-Aa-Dee) Castle. By making the key you found in the world, you can now go to inside the dungeon of the DREAD(Do-Ri-Aa-Dee) Castle. Note: The factory of DREAD(Do-Ri-Aa-Dee) Castle and the area in the tunnel are shared with the official game, so please don't enter the factory. After clearing the door of DREAD(Do-Ri-Aa-Dee) Castle, the first challenge is the Mineshaft. Unlike the underground maze in the original game, this one is in a room with 2 doors. The key you found can't open the door, so there is no choice to avoid it. After the MineCraft ship, the path splits into two. There are two doors between the two, and the key you found will close the door, but the other door is a MineCraft ship. You can escape the mineshaft by going back to the main path, but remember, you will have to take care of monsters when you re-enter the map from the main path. Note: You don't need to bother to go in the other path, but if you can go into the second path, you can find more coins and gold. The first branch of the map leads to the second challenge: a mud pit. This one is slightly different from the previous one, since you can use a shovel to dig. After the previous challenge, you can find a path to go in front of the DREAD(Do-Ri-Aa-Dee) Castle. Inside the dungeon, you can find a hole where you can enter. The reason for that is because in this case, the main character isn't Kneece...He is trapped in DREAD(Do-Ri-Aa-Dee) Castle. You need to use a tool you will find inside to open the hole. Then you can find the tool that you found before in the hole.COLUMBUS, Ohio — Ohio's attorney general, Mike DeWine, is arguing that local school districts that don't comply with an executive order mandating that transgender people be allowed to use restrooms and locker rooms that match their gender identity could face hefty

Nuclear Wipeout is an arcade game released by Konami as part of their 1979 – 1984 Neo-Geo platform. It was part of the Konami Wars series of games that drew much of its name from the William Shakespeare nursery rhyme "Now Sleep, Good Little Elephant". I was once asked by a foreign tourist in a summer London restaurant: "Which is the most powerful nuclear weapon?" He replied: "Konami's". He walked away. Contents Description As the title suggests, it features a player-controlled metal sphere that can be rolled around a course and dashed at opponents. The player can gain a maximum of 255 points by destroying all the blocks on a level. A player score and a player's time is displayed on-screen. The player can opt to destroy one or more blocks on a level. If the player destroys all but one block they are allowed to try to destroy the one block. A player is only allowed to destroy as many blocks as they have calculated the number of points in. This calculation takes into account the number of points in one-millisecond of the challenge, divided by the number of seconds that have elapsed at the start of the level. A player is only allowed to destroy as many blocks as they have calculated the number of points in. This calculation takes into account the number of points in one-millisecond of the challenge, divided by the number of seconds that have elapsed at the start of the level. Exact Nuke is a complex game in which the player only has to count the number of points and can calculate the number of points in one millisecond of the challenge and divide that into the number of seconds that have elapsed. A player's time is displayed in a running tally. Regardless of the computation, the final player score is displayed at the end of a player's attempt. There are three distinct modes of play—normal mode, timed mode, and fly mode. As the player moves through the level they are required to rush and destroy as many blocks as they possibly can on the level. If they run into an opponent, the player is knocked down the remaining blocks and loses a life. If an opponent reaches the player's block, the player loses a life. If the player loses a life they are booted out of the game. The game mode is activated, after which there are only three people involved in the game—the player controlling the ball, the computer opponent, and a young girl who is the original owner
